The Risk Assessment Process

Overview

In 2014 the Registration to Work with Vulnerable People Act 2013 (the Act) commenced in Tasmania. The purpose of this important piece of legislation is to create a centralised background checking and risk assessment process for people working with vulnerable people, to reduce the risk of sexual, physical and emotional harm.

The concept behind background checking is that past behaviour of an applicant provides an indication of the possible future behaviour of an applicant. Therefore a national criminal history check and processing of relevant information from other sources are important elements of background checking and part of what is called a 'risk assessment'.

The Act aims to:

- Deter people from applying to work with children where they have criminal histories that could indicate they pose a risk of harm to vulnerable people
- Prevent those with such criminal records who do apply from gaining positions of trust when working with vulnerable people
- Establish consistent standards for background screening for working with vulnerable people and the ethical use of such information

What does this fact sheet explain?

This fact sheet should guide the applicant as to what type of criminal history will indicate to the Registrar that the applicant or registered person may pose a risk of harm to children. It also serves to guide any applicant who does have a criminal history as to what information can be supplied to the Registrar to support their application.

The Registrar can request further information from the applicant when conducting an initial risk assessment, and can request further information when auditing people who have an existing registration to work with children. This fact sheet is relevant for all circumstances.
Who must apply for a Working with Vulnerable People (Children) Registration?

The criteria that requires registration to work with children is determined by the work the person is engaged in and by the closeness of contact they have with children. The type of contact or work that must be registered is called a ‘regulated activity’.

Regulated activities are determined by the Registration to Work with Vulnerable People Regulations 2014.

The application process

When an application for a Working with Vulnerable People (Children) Registration is lodged, an applicant gives consent to undergo a national background check. If a person is successful in gaining registration, they also consent to ongoing monitoring for the duration of their registration.

The purpose of these checks is to assess whether a person poses no risk, an acceptable risk or an unacceptable risk of harm to children.

Information that may be considered during the risk assessment process includes the full criminal history of the applicant (including non-conviction information such as allegations, pending charges, and any orders the person is subject to), employment history and other information considered relevant.

During the risk assessment process, applicants or registered persons may be asked to provide additional information, provide references or undergo an interview in relation to their application or registration. The Registrar also has the power to obtain information and advice from other entities, including employers, when considered relevant.

The process for the background check and risk assessment is established in legislation. That is, the Registration to Work with Vulnerable People Act 2013 sets out what information must or may be taken into account when conduct the risk assessment, specifies where further information can be obtained and how personal information is handled. The Act also details the offences that will trigger further investigation, which may result in a negative risk assessment and a refusal of registration.

The following information outlines the risk assessment process in more detail. This information should used to assist an applicant in determining what information should be provided to the Registrar in their application, and how the information is likely to be assessed.

The background check

A risk assessment is an evaluation of an individual’s eligibility for child-related work, as in whether a person poses a risk to the safety of children. The assessment is conducted by the Working with Children Unit and the outcome is either a clearance or a refusal to work with children.

The assessment process is typically completed within six weeks. For some cases, the assessment can take longer, depending on the nature and location of the records involved. The Working with Children Unit will keep an applicant informed throughout the review process and will make all reasonable attempts to complete the risk assessment process as soon as is practicable after an application is received.

When a person applies for a Working with Vulnerable People (Children) Registration, there are three possible outcomes:
• successful (without conditions) Working with Vulnerable People (Children) Registration
• successful (with conditions) Working with Vulnerable People (Children) Registration
• refusal of a Working with Vulnerable People (Children) Registration

Matters that can be taken into account

In Tasmania, a number of matters may be taken into account for the purpose of a background check. These matters include:

• the criminal history of the applicant, including his/her national and international criminal history:
  - a relevant offence the applicant has been found guilty of, even if a conviction has not been recorded or it has been annulled
  - the non-conviction history of the applicant, including allegations or pending charges
  - any orders that the applicant may have been subject to (including restraint orders, family violence orders or child protection orders)
• any past reportable behaviour that indicates the person poses a risk of harm to vulnerable persons, whether by reason of neglect, abuse or other conduct
• whether the person has been refused registration, or had their registration suspended or cancelled, in Tasmania or any other jurisdiction
• the employment history of the applicant (including unemployment history, information about any misconduct or disciplinary actions taken against the person)
• any relevant personal information about the applicant (such as multiples change of name or address)
• whether the applicant has provided false or misleading information, or failed to provide relevant information, at any stage during the application or risk assessment process
• any other matter that the Registrar considers relevant in the circumstances.

Changes in circumstances

An applicant must notify the Register of any change in relevant information including name, address, employer, and criminal history. Similarly, registered persons who are already working with vulnerable persons must also update the Registrar as to any relevant changes in circumstances.

Relevant Offences

Relevant offences are defined in the Act as:

• an offence under the Poisons Act 1971 or the Misuse of Drugs Act 2001, or a similar offence committed elsewhere
• any of the following offences, whether committed in Tasmania or elsewhere
  - a sexual offence
  - an offence against a person
  - an offence involving violence
  - an offence involving dishonesty or fraud
o an offence relating to property
o an offence against an animal
o a driving offence

• an offence committed in Tasmania or elsewhere relating to another offence that comprises of any of the following behaviours
  o attempting to commit the offence
  o inciting, instigating, aiding or abetting the commission of the other offence
  o being an accessory after the fact to the other offence

The offences which will be considered relevant by the Registrar are listed in the Schedule of Offences, as prescribed in the Registration to Work with Vulnerable People Regulations 2014.

How is risk assessed?

When assessing a person’s suitability, or ongoing suitability, for child-related work, the following factors may be considered in relation to the information assessed as part of the risk assessment process:

Factors relating to the conduct:
• nature, gravity or seriousness of the matter (as demonstrated by details of the conduct, court outcome and penalty)
• length of time since the conduct occurred
• age and vulnerability of the victim(s)
• relationship between the offender and victim(s)
• age difference between the offender and victim(s)
• impact on the victim(s)

Factors relating to the applicant or registered person:
• conduct since the offence/alleged offence
• likelihood of the offences being repeated
• whether there is a pattern of concerning conduct.

Accessible information

To assist in conducting a risk assessment the Registrar may request and obtain information and advice from other entities.

When the request for information is made the entity must provide the information requested and, providing the information does not breach any other duties they have related to confidentiality despite any laws or agreements.

Information can be sourced from:
• a relevant entity
• a public authority of a jurisdiction other than Tasmania
• a government agency, or part of a government agency of a jurisdiction other than Tasmania
• a body, corporate or unincorporated, established by or under the statute law of a jurisdiction other than Tasmania

Risk assessment results

If a risk assessment determines that a person poses an unacceptable risk of harm to vulnerable persons, the Registrar will notify the person in writing that the Registrar intends to refuse to register the person. This notification is called a proposed negative notice, or an intention to suspend or cancel registration for persons who are already registered.

There are a number of instances where the Registrar must automatically issue a proposed negative notice or an intention to suspend or cancel the registered persons registration. These include:

• where the applicant has been charged with, or convicted of, a Schedule 1 offence, and
• if at the time the offence was committed, the applicant was an adult and the victim was a child.

The purpose of a proposed negative notice, or an intention to suspend or cancel registration, is to advise the applicant or registered persons that the Registrar has made a negative risk assessment against them and to outline the process that follows.

Review of negative risk assessment

The person has the opportunity to request the Registrar reconsider the negative risk assessment and to provide further information into the circumstances surrounding the circumstances that have resulted in the negative risk assessment.

If the person does not make this request, a ‘negative notice’ will be issued by the Registrar and registration will not be granted. In the case of registered persons, their registration will be suspended or cancelled.

If a Working with Vulnerable People (Children) Registration is refused, it is a criminal offence to work in regulated child related activities for five years (unless circumstances have changed that permit an earlier application).

If the person is already working with children, they must immediately cease working or volunteering in a child related regulated activity.
